ROBERT L. ASHBY SPEAKS AT ORIENT

Proper construction of buildings erected for public gatherings and public entertainments was the subject which Architect Ashby spoke upon at the Orient Theatre last Thursday evening.

Old time buildings, said Mr. Ashby, absolutely endanger the lives of the public both from a sanitary and fire-proof standpoint.

He spoke of the modern ventilation system of the Orient Theatre, with its four massive vent flues in each wall and four in the ceiling, taking out the warm and foul air and the cool air coming in from the basement and systematic ventilation at all times.

Mr. Ashby pointed out the fact that the old style windows only created draught and was certainly very poor ventilation. He also spoke of the solid concrete machine room, and concrete floor and fireproof construction of the beautiful building throughout. Also of its modern conveniences which add so greatly to the comfort and pleasure of its patrons.

He also stated that the Orient Theatre would be a credit to any city fifty times as large as American Fork, and as very much pleased to note that the people are proud of it and appreciate it.

Mr. Ashby's remarks were very instructive as well as educational. 8-11 (adv.)
